KING ARTHUR OF THE

KING ARTHUR and his Knights of the Round Table are widely viewed as the embodiment of the manly ideal. But a top expert now claims every last one of them was a flaming homosexual!

Arthurian scholar Edmund Jemston says that myths and distortions piled on over the centuries have kept the gay caballeros in the closet until now.

"In the Dark Ages, when the historical Arthur lived, homosexuality was not generally seen as sinful. The old Greco-Roman notion that the life of a warrior and same-sex behavior were compatible was still widespread," says Jemston, author of an upcoming book titled, Gay Camelot.

ARTHURIAN SCHOLAR Edmund Jemston opens closet door!

"It was only much later that historians such as Geoffrey of Monmouth, embarrassed at the gay exploits of Arthur and his men, 'butched up' the legend with all their romantic rubbish about damsels in distress."

King Arthur and his knights were proud of their homosexuality, says the historian, who spent 14 years poring over the earliest accounts in Latin.

"They believed that avoiding intercourse with women was the key to purity — keeping ladies at arm's length was what their famous code of chivalry was all about," says Jemston. "In fact, women were banned from Camelot."

The Round Table, which was adorned with a bright rainbow pattern, is itself a clue to the knights' sexual preferences.

"The circle is one of the most ancient symbols of femininity in Western culture," reveals Jemston. "In a homosexual of that era, the meaning of 'meeting at a round table' would be unmistakable.

'Arthur's knights even were the symbol as a pendant — a form of 'advertising' — as they roamed the countryside, recruiting young men."

Among the many startling assertions the expert makes:

● Arthur was initiated into homosexuality at an early age by Merlin, described in the book as a flamboyant, gown-wearing cross-dresser. "Merlin's 'magic wand' wasn't quite like Harry Potter's," the historian says.

● Contrary to his squeaky-clean image, pretty boy Sir Galahad was a particularly promiscuous homosexual, banking at least 8,000 men. "He should have been dubbed Sir Guy-ahad," the professor notes.

● Queen Guinevere never had an adulterous affair with Sir Lancelot — it was hubby King Arthur who got lancel-a-ot. "Guinevere, the only woman in Camelot, was Arthur's wife in name only and knew all about 'Lance,'" says Jemison. "She was what some today might unflatteringly call a 'fag hag.'"

● Many terms that crop up in Arthurian legend are medieval code words for gay activity. "To slay a dragon,' 'behead a giant,' and 'pull a sword from the stone,' all refer to specific homosexual acts," Jemison explains.

Despite their gay shenanigans, the knights were formidable men of action.

"If one of them encountered a handsome, well-built fellow, he'd identify himself as one of Arthur's men by flashing his pendant and issuing a challenge," Jemison says. "The stranger, thinking he'd have little trouble dispatching a 'sissy,' would agree to do battle — and usually be defeated.

"He'd then be compelled to join the Order of the Round Table himself."

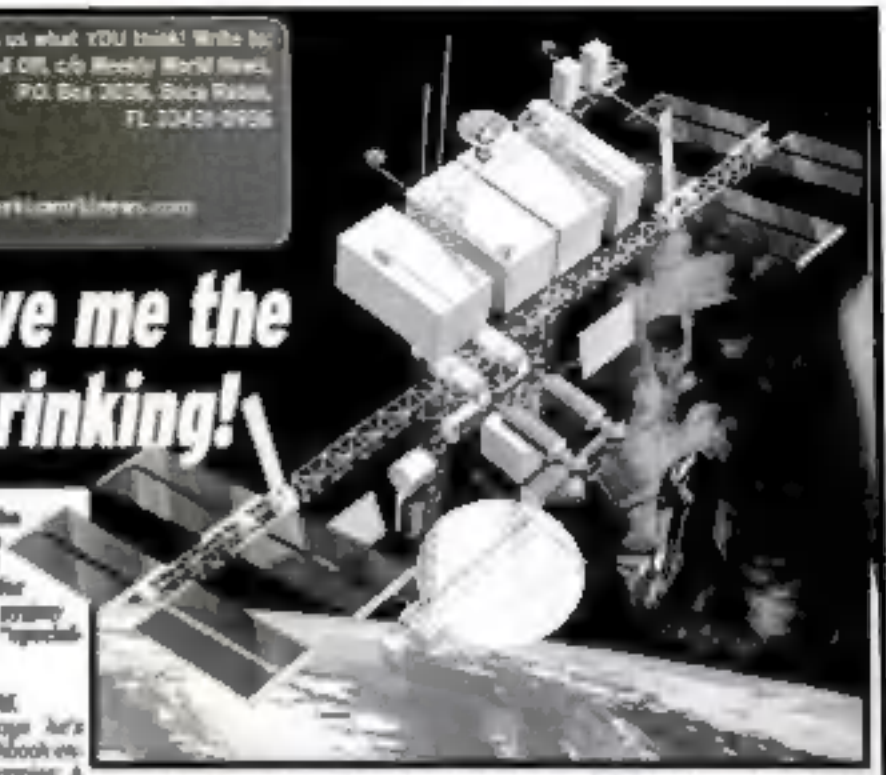
God's message gave me the strength to stop drinking!



Dear Editor,

That was a shocking cover story you had in your July 22 issue about the message from God received by the space station.

If that message is truly from the Lord, then we all need to straighten up our acts, so that when we land in Purgatory, we will be found worthy of ascending to Heaven. I, for one, am giving up drinking, but I am not going to stop gambling, because I don't see that as a sin in the eyes of the Lord.

After all, the church sponsors bingo tournaments.

If there really is a Purgatory, as mentioned in that article, then we're not worried. We're sure the Almighty has a special place in Heaven set aside for tabloid reporters!

Dear Editor,

I enjoyed the article about the pygmy diet in your July 1, 2003, issue. It looks like just the thing I've been looking for to control my weight problem.

I don't think cannibalism is so shocking. Many of our ancestors practiced cannibalism long before we came along.

LIKE all great chefs, Lucumba Tumbo puts a lot of heart in his cooking.

Does Chef Lucumba Tumbo have a Web site or a cookbook I could refer to for recipes? Also, can pygmy meat be found at any "specialty" butcher shops?

Suzy B.

Lemon Grove, Calif.

Chef Lucumba says he's hard at work on a cookbook entitled, Three Little Pygmies: A Connoisseur's Guide To Cannibalism. Look for it this fall at a bookstore near you. We haven't heard of any butcher shops selling pygmy meat yet, but many shops do offer "mystery meat," which makes us wonder.

Dear WWN,

I have always enjoyed the story of the Incredible Hulk. In the past, you have reported some stories about werewolves and Bigfoot. But could it really be possible for a human being to transform into a giant, hulking monster? If it could happen, it would be a great story for Weekly World News. Maybe this Hulk thing will open the door to some scientific research.

John P.

A real-life Hulk? Sounds pretty incredible to us. We're not sure if such a thing is possible, but you never know. After all, there was a time when people laughed at the idea of Bat Boy, but they're not laughing now.

Meanwhile, we continue to receive hundreds of letters a week from guys looking to hook up with the world's sexiest Siamese twins. Here's one of them.

THE HULK: He's a mean green wrecking machine!

Dear Kimberly and Karen,

Hi! My name is Jaime. I've been looking for someone to fall in love with and hopefully find my soulmate. I hope it might be y'all! I came across your article in Weekly World News and found it very touching.

Y'all were looking for a husband, so I thought I would write to you, in the hopes of getting a reply. Y'all are two beautiful and very sexy, attractive women. Y'all sounded like a person I would like to get to know better.

I hope that y'all will say yes. Let me be the one that will light up y'all's live. Let me be your "knight shine and armor" that rides up on a white horse to save y'all from y'all's lonely days and lonely nights. Let me be the one that fills y'all's days with a smile and sunshine in your life. Will y'all be my sweethearts for now and forever?

I'll be waiting for y'all's reply. I can be the man of y'all's lives.

Jaime H.

Akron, Ohio.

Kimberly and Karen reply: "Jaime, your letter was so sweet, it really made our day. It's great to know there are so many romantic guys out there. We still have hundreds more letters to read, but yours was the nicest one so far. Even if we never get to meet you, it's nice to know there is such a brave knight out there waiting for some lucky girl."

'Jack the Ripper' was a lightweight compared to modern serial killers

By MIKE FOSTER
Correspondent

THE NAME "Jack the Ripper" still sends chills up the spines of many folks — but to the world's top serial killers, he's a bumbling amateur who doesn't deserve a place among the hack-and-slash elite, a new survey reveals!

The poll of 40 high-body-count murderers worldwide, conducted by the Grubby Association for Criminal Justice Research, found that the notorious fiend is not ranked among the Top Ten Serial Killers in history by his peers. In fact, he's reviled as an overrated "lightweight" whose meager number of confirmed kills — just five — is considered pathetic by today's standards.

"He didn't run up a very impressive score — what was it, four, five?" grumbles a Texas inmate awaiting execution for more than two dozen gruesome murders. "I bagged that many by the time I was 13.

"The guy's reputation is way inflated. Personally, I don't even include him in my list of the top 50 serial killers."

Another reason why JTR failed to "make the cut" is his choice of victims.

"His victim-selection was weak," says a slayer on death row in Alabama. "Prostitutes? Anyone can knock off a hooker and get away with it. They don't have a husband to protect them who maybe has a gun, no one misses them and the cops hardly bother to investigate."

Another convicted serial killer argued that if Jack's crime spree took place today it "wouldn't even make it onto CNN."

Even the flamboyant Ripper's public-relations skills are branded "practically nonexistent" by modern-day mass murderers.

"Those letters he wrote taunting the cops were gibberish — the dude was illiterate," notes a life-crazy critic behind bars in California.

"Have you seen them? I mean, they're just embarrassing. His spelling was atrocious, and the dude used so many double negatives, to this day the detectives over in England are trying to figure out what he was trying to say."

Researchers at the Houston-based organization were surprised that JTR received such a vigorous and universal thumbs down.

"Yes, Jack the Ripper wasn't a prolific killer, but the subjects were asked to give points for style and influence on others," says a research associate. "We really thought Jack would have received credit for his great panache and having been a source of inspiration.

"He'd be disappointed to know he's held in such low regard by his peers."

LONELY?

TRY DOGGY DANCING TO CURE THE BLUES

By JEFFREY L. BURIAN
Correspondent

IT USED to be that if someone told you, "Your dance partner is a dog," those would be fighting words — but not anymore.

A leading New York City psychiatrist says dancing with your pooch is a terrific cure for the blues — and to promote the uplifting activity, he's founded a school where twinkle-toed tail-waggers learn to cut a rug with their masters.

At the Doggy Dance Academy, canines become expert at dances ranging from the waltz and cha-cha to the lambada.

"Dancing the night away with your dog relieves loneliness and depression — and even for people who aren't down in the dumps, it's a lot of fun," says Dr. Don Benzak, who set up the school last year.

"Pets have been helping humans cure loneliness for thousands of years and we've always known how smart, loyal and caring they are — we just never realized before that they had such good rhythm."

Dr. Benzak says he discovered the power of doggy-dancing himself after coming home after a particularly stressful day.

"I turned on the radio and this jazz tune was playing," he says. "My little shih tzu ran over and I instinctively picked him up and began dancing around the living room with him. Within minutes, the most amazing thing happened — all my stress left me.

"I figured if it could work for me, it could work for others too."

Canine choreographer Terri Doratino, main instructor at the academy, says that in formal doggy dancing, the animal stands on its hind legs rather than just being held in the human partner's arms.

"People, especially tall ones, generally look best on the dance floor with larger breeds such as Great Danes," she says. "Smaller breeds, like the dachshund or the Yorkshire terrier, generally don't make the best dance partners."

But some breeds appear to be naturals.

"[illegible] and poodles as swing," Doratein says.

Graduates of the academy receive a certificate for themselves and their dogs. Some say they enjoy the odd form of recreation so much that they join up with other enthusiasts for doggy-dancing parties.

The fad is now picking up so much steam that doggy-dancing is showing up at unexpected public places.

"Say you get invited to a wedding and you don't have a date," Dr. Benzak says.

"Most brides love dogs and are delighted to let you bring one as your guest. If you explain it's

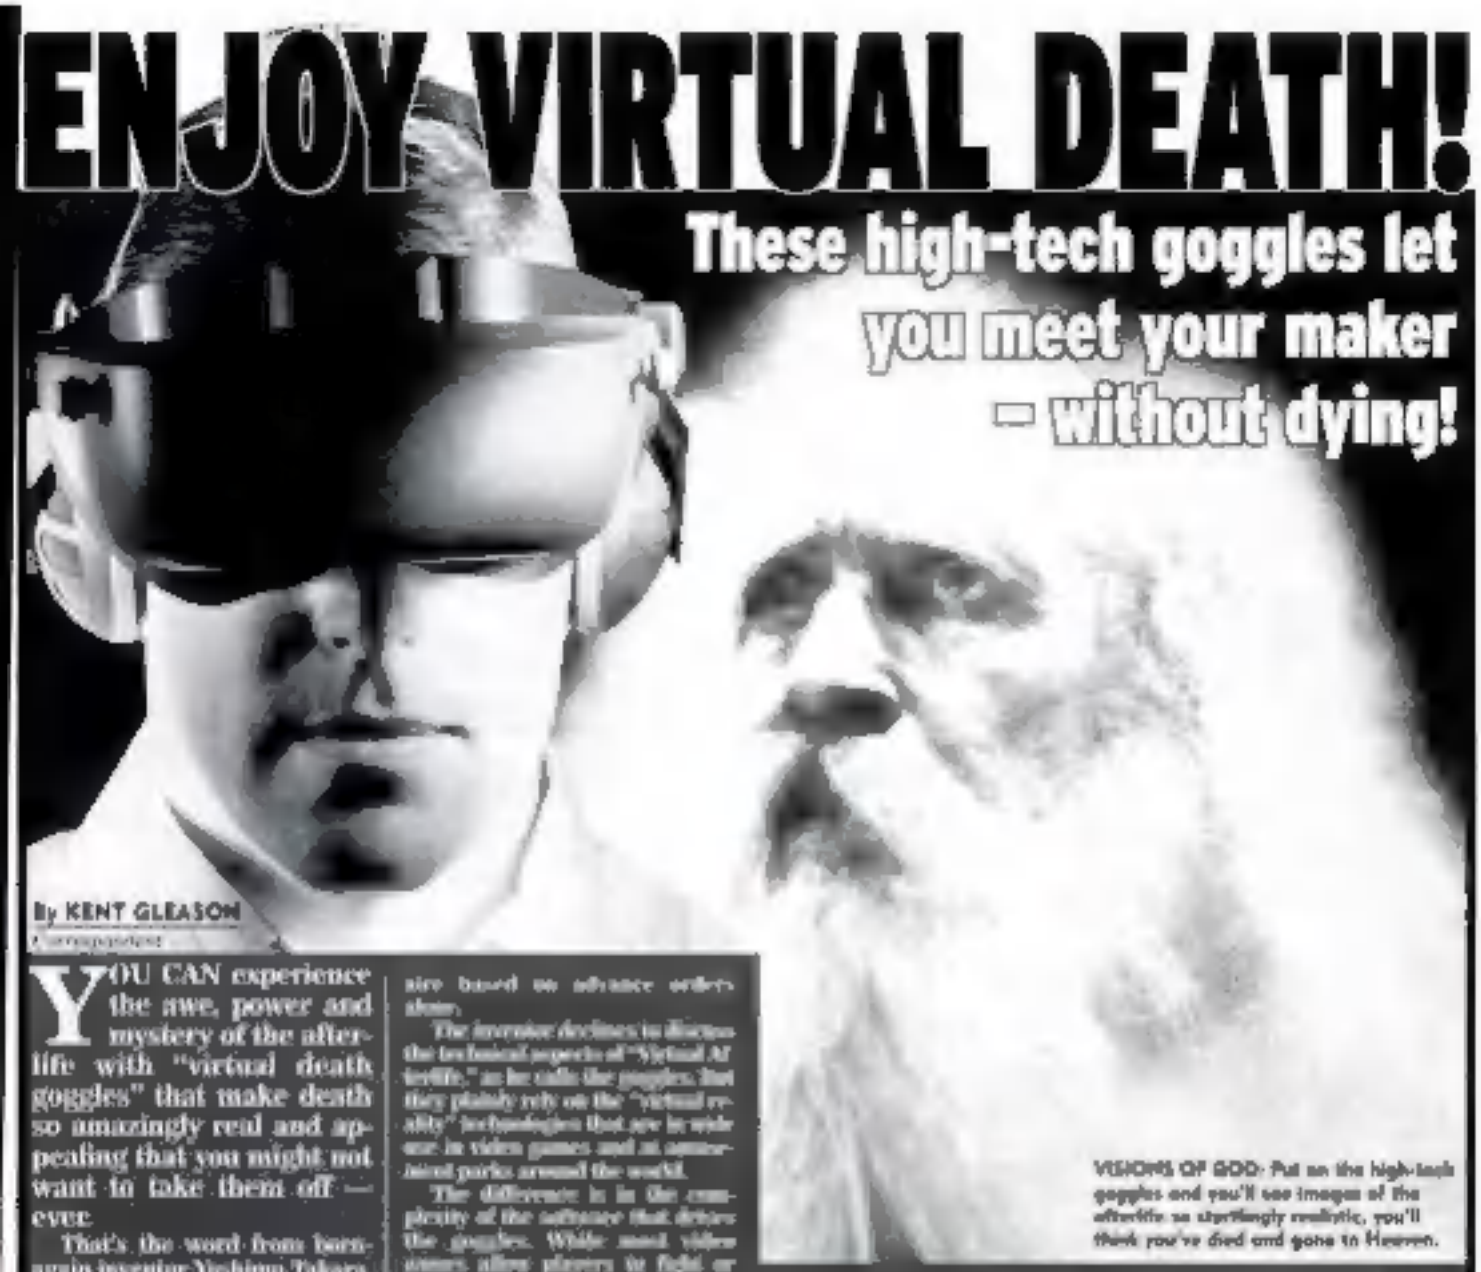
ENJOY VIRTUAL DEATH!

These high-tech goggles let you meet your maker — without dying!



VISIONS OF GOD: Put on the high-tech goggles and you'll see images of the afterlife so startlingly realistic, you'll think you've died and gone to Heaven.

By KENT GLEASON
Correspondent

YOU CAN experience the awe, power and mystery of the afterlife with "virtual death goggles" that make death so amazingly real and appealing that you might not want to take them off — ever.

That's the word from born-again inventor Yoshimo Takara, the computer expert who introduced the goggles at a technology show and is now swamped with orders that by his estimate will take four to six years to fill.

"I made the goggles for my children — I had no idea adults would line up to buy them," Takara, 38, told reporters. "But I have seen how people respond when they put them on. They are very happy.

"In some cases, they grew angry and push you away when you try to take them away."

But he isn't complaining. With a suggested retail price of $2,500 a pair, Takara's company is already a millionaire based on advance orders alone.

The inventor declines to discuss the technical aspects of "Virtual Afterlife," as he calls the goggles, but they plainly rely on the "virtual reality" technologies that are in wide use in video games and at amusement parks around the world.

The difference is in the complexity of the software that drives the goggles. While most video games allow players to fight or race cars or pilot starships, Takara's goggles actually allow users to speak with Jesus and his disciples, sit on God's lap, and wander through landscapes of such incredibly serenity that some users already are being described clinically as "addicts."

WRITER Tammy Maron claims the virtual death goggles changed her life.

But there's more. By purchasing additional software, users can chat with departed friends and loved ones.

There's even a program that allows users to "try" suicide, a feature that Takara admits is apt to be the most popular in Japan, where suicide is considered honorable.

1,000-POUND TENANT WRECKS APARTMENT BUILDING

HUGE PROBLEM: Obese Oscar Grobeski must have building's front torn off when he leaves or returns.

By JEFFREY L. GURIAN
Correspondent

HARD-LUCK landlord Herb Stebbinger says his 11-story apartment building is being ruined — by a single 1,018-pound tenant.

Oscar Grobeski's extreme obesity has led to multiple hospitalizations — and each one means a date with a wrecking ball for the resistance building in Queens, N.Y.

"Mr. Grobeski can't fit through the door; he is too heavy for the elevator and needs to be moved with a forklift, so each time he's hospitalized, they have to tear down the front of my building to get him out," Stebbinger, 51, says.

"In the last three years, he's been hospitalized 14 times — costing me a total of $350,000. It's not fair."

After the fourteenth extraction, Stebbinger served Grobeski with an eviction notice, claiming he was going bankrupt.

"The other tenants complain because of the shape the building is in and they don't want to pay their rent," the landlord complains.

"But there's no point in fixing the exterior, because as soon as I do, Mr. Grobeski comes home from the hospital — and they have to break it down all over again.

something that doesn't have walls."

The landlord claims his problem tenant cost him additional cash when he:

- Demolished the porcelain toilet in his apartment with his colossal weight.
- Became stuck in a bathtub, necessitating its destruction with a jackhammer.
- Damaged the ceiling of the apartment below with his heavy steps. "Experts told me all the shaking was the equivalent of a small earthquake," Stebbinger claims.
- Drove tenants out of the downstairs apartment with his deafening footfalls.

HE'S COST ME $350,000 IN DAMAGES, SAYS LANDLORD!

STEBBINGER: Angry landlord says building has been ruined.

Grobeski is now suing to keep his apartment. He has hired a team of legal heavyweights who call the eviction "an obvious case of discrimination."

Grobeski, who also accuses Stebbinger of repeatedly referring to him as "Tubby," says he felt hurt and outraged when he read the eviction notice.

"Just 'cause I'm sick and overweight, Mr. Stebbinger wants to kick me out of my home," he says. "He's a grown-up version of the kids who used to pick on me at school."

Asked about the comment, Stebbinger responds: "We'll let the courts decide. As of right now, I've had enough."

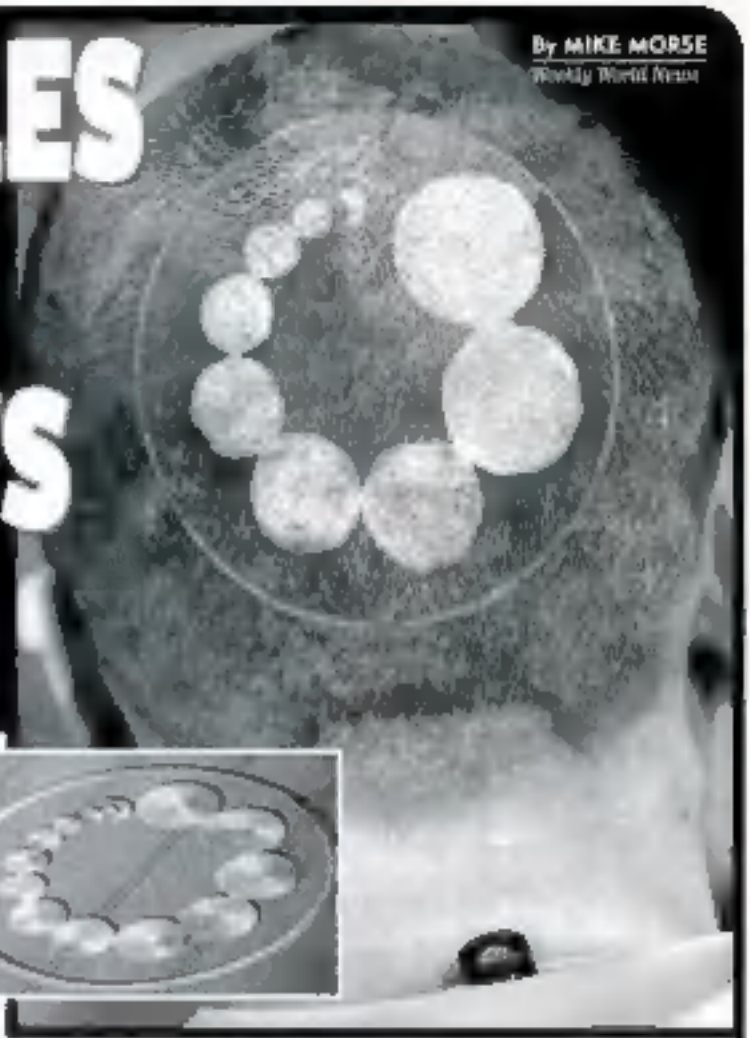
CROP CIRCLES APPEARING ON PEOPLE'S HEADS

By MIKE MORSE
Weekly World News



CROP CUT: The pattern cut into to this man's hair is eerily similar to that of a mysterious crop circle in England (inset).

HAIR-RAISING reports are pouring in from around the world of intricate crop circles mysteriously appearing overnight — on people's scalps.

Baffled investigators are probing a possible link between "cranial crop circles" and strikingly similar markings that have repeatedly shown up on the White House lawn over the past six months, as reported in the July 29 issue of Weekly World News.

The elaborate designs are created while the individual is asleep, yet not one of the victims or their partners has reported waking up during the procedure.

Victims say they wake from "an unusually restful sleep" to find a complex array of circles and lines shaved into their heads.

"The cranial patterns are too intricate for the perpetrator of a hoax to have fashioned them without waking the recipients in the process," says Dr Leonard Schemmel, head of the Alien Research Center in New Mexico.

"We've gathered over 300 reports of cranial crop circles from 12 different countries, which appear to rule out a hoax.

"We're convinced that these are genuine cases of extraterrestrial contact."

One eerie case is that of waitress Delores M., 59, of Portland, Oregon.

"It scares me to think that some space creature was in my bedroom, messing with my head," says Delores, whose red hair was turned into a mind-bending matrix of complex designs.

Fortunately for victims, the shaved sections of their heads grow back quickly.

"Apparently, the work was done with some sort of laser-like instrument that spares the hair follicles," says Dr. Schemmel. "The patterns stay until the victim's hair grows again."

Why certain individuals are selected to receive the markings remains a mystery.

But the progression from remote fields to human heads is significant — and suggests a growing urgency on the part of the aliens, experts believe.

Another victim, who asked to be called "David," awoke to find a well-designed pattern shaved into his hair down to the scalp.

BUZZ CUT: This is no hoax, says Dr. Leonard Schemmel.

"I'm not sleeping too well."

"The prevailing explanation for crop circles is that they're messages from extraterrestrials," Dr. Schemmel says. "Perhaps the ETs are trying to let us know we haven't got the message yet — so they're literally pounding it into our heads."

Dr. Schemmel has interviewed several high-level government officials in an effort to establish a link between the carved crania and the White House crop circles. He has had little cooperation.

"But we're convinced there's a connection," he says. "I've received word from reliable sources that several Cabinet members have developed cranial crop circles, and are reluctant [illegible]

AMELIA EARHART'S BARF BAG FOUND IN SOUTH PACIFIC

THE SHOCKING discovery of Amelia Earhart's barf bag on a remote and uninhabited island proves that she got physically ill and threw up in the cockpit of her airplane before it vanished in the South Pacific during her flight around the world in 1937.

And it also suggests that she did, as many have speculated, land or crash her plane, the Electra, on Gardner Island (now called Nikumaroro Island) after losing radio contact with her spotting vessel, the Itasca, just hours after taking off from Lae and heading for Howland Island on the last leg of her historic, 22,000-mile journey.

"We haven't solved the mystery of Amelia's disappearance, but we're one step closer to the truth," forensic archaeologist and Earhart expert Dr. Robert Call told reporters.

"As unassuming as it might seem to laymen, the barf bag contains an unusually large volume of vomitus that has a DNA footprint identical to Amelia's.

"That suggests that she made it to Gardner Island, to dry land, and didn't disappear in the Pacific as many have speculated.

"And if that was, in fact, the case, she might have survived for years while the U.S. Navy and every adventurer in the South Seas tried and failed to find her.

PROOF IS IN THE PUKE: Tests on barf-bag vomit show a 99 percent match to DNA in Amelia Earhart's hair.

"It also suggests that if we keep looking, we'll find other evidence — pieces of her airplane or even the remains of her body — to solve the mystery of her disappearance once and for all."

Earhart vanished while attempting to become the first woman to fly around the world on a trip that started in Florida on June 1, 1937, and was expected to end in California a few weeks later.

Most experts believe she and her navigator, Fred Noonan, lost their bearings, ran out of fuel and simply crashed into the Pacific while flying between Lae and Howland Island.

But conspiracy theories and speculation abound, with some believing the two were captured by by Japanese and executed as spies.

Still others think Earhart survived and lived to a ripe old age with friendly and accommodating natives in an undiscovered South Sea paradise.

The trip had been relatively uneventful until Earhart and Noonan reached Lae on June 29. With 22,000 miles of the journey behind them, they had just 7,000 more to go — all over the Pacific Ocean.

As a safeguard, the U.S. Coast Guard cutter Itasca was anchored off Howland Island as a radio contact.

The aviators left Lae on July 2 with enough fuel to fly approximately 20 hours. Twenty hours and 14 minutes into the flight, she radioed Itasca, giving positioning data and was never heard from again.

In recent years, archaeologists have focused on Gardner Island — renamed Nikumaroro — as a possible crash site or landing spot for Earhart. It was there that Dr. Call found her hard bag, perfectly preserved in mud near a spring-fed pool of water. Folded shut and covered by silt, it was, he says, "almost perfectly preserved."

"We were looking for anything that we could associate with Amelia and there wasn't a doubt in our mind that it belonged to her," he told newsmen. "By comparing DNA from the contents of the bag with strands of her hair that were preserved between the pages of a family Bible, we were able to confirm that it was hers.

"We believe that the bag proves she made it to Gardner Island because it is extremely unlikely she would have bothered to jettison such a trivial thing while she was crashing into the Pacific.

"Now it's just a matter of finding corroborating evidence to prove that Amelia not only survived, she could have been rescued — if only we could have found her."

GIANT MYSTERY EGG FOUND IN ARCTIC!

By JOHN MOSER

A GIGANTIC egg found by American scientists in the Arctic has been jetted to Washington — to be hatched.

"No one knows what's going to come out of that egg," says Dr. Amy Rosser, the esteemed scientist who made international headlines in the 1970s when she linked the declining birth rates of Arctic animals to increasing levels of DDT in the food chain.

"It could be a dinosaur, it could be a giant chicken ... or it could be a space-alien from another world. X-rays, CAT scans and DNA tests will tell us more, but we intend to proceed cautiously.

"The last thing we want to do is traumatize the embryo before it hatches, especially if it's something extraordinary, such as a prehistoric animal, an extraterrestrial ... or even that giant chicken."

Dr. Rosser and a team of five specialists found the partially exposed, 6-foot egg lodged in permafrost while meticulously documenting the movements and mating patterns of polar bears a few hundred miles south of the North Pole.

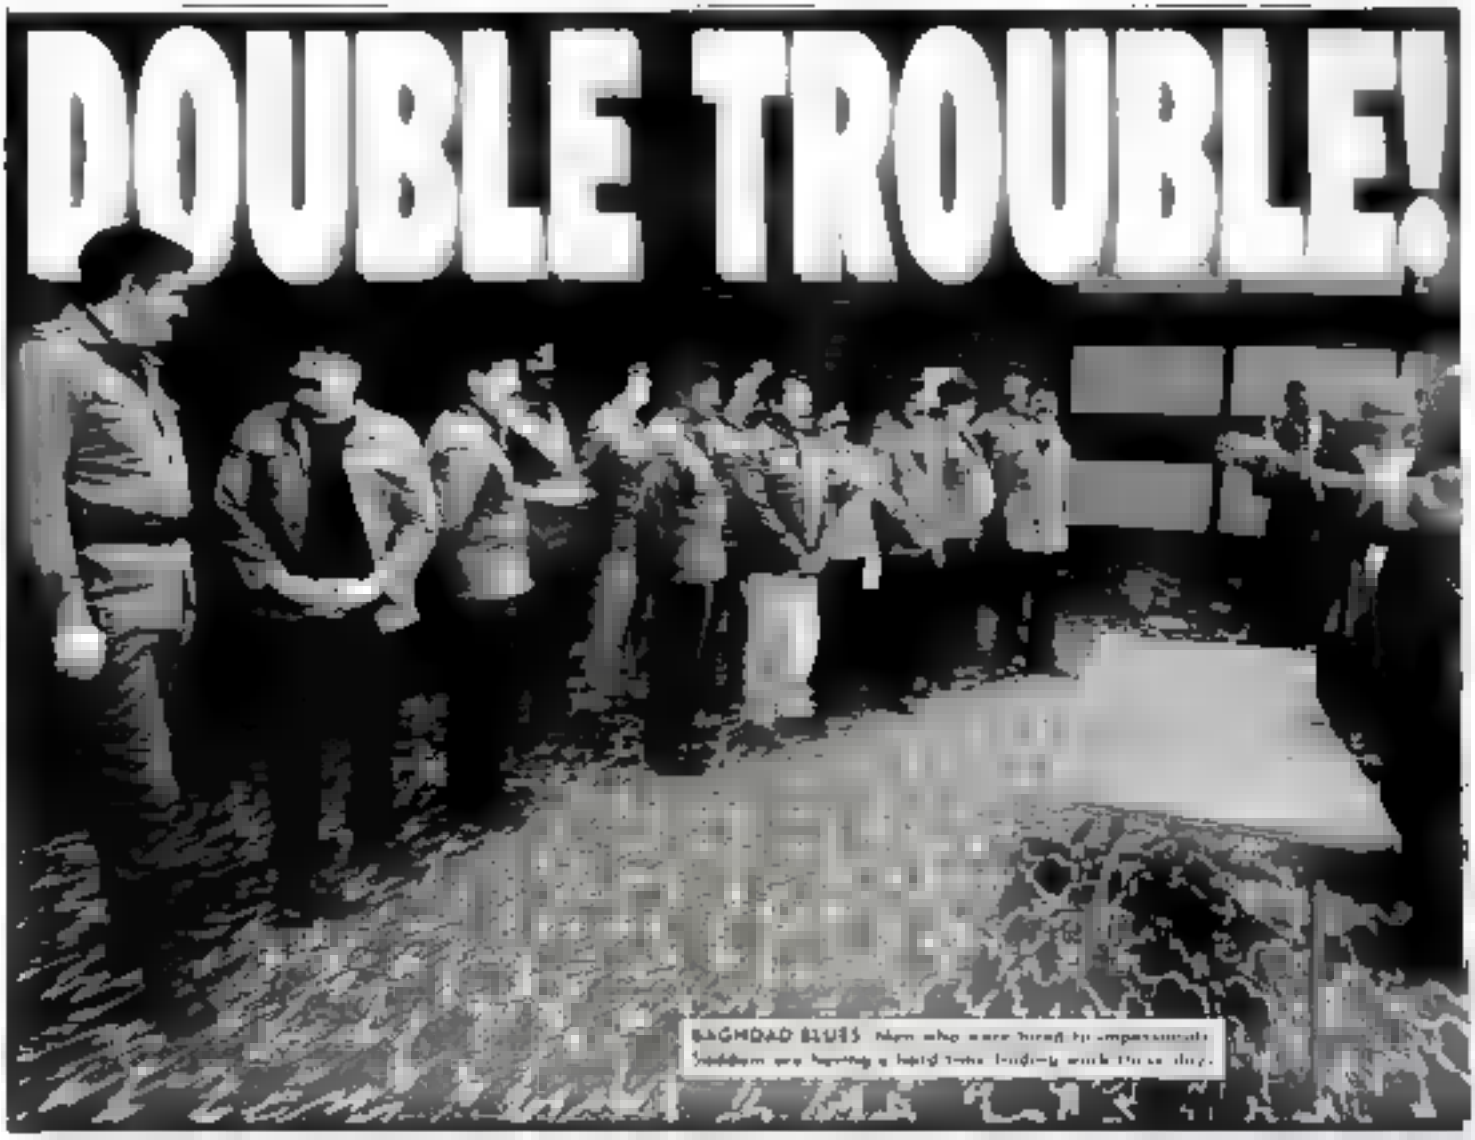
DOUBLE TROUBLE!



BAGHDAD BLUES Men who were hired to impersonate Saddam are having a hard time finding work these days.

HUSSEIN STATUE SHEDS

CRYING TIME: A statue of

By JUSTIN MITCHELL

OVER THE years numerous statues and images of the Virgin Mary have been known to miraculously start "weeping," but an Iraqi statue of Saddam Hussein in his birthplace of Tikrit has joined the club. Huge crowds have gathered in recent days to witness mysterious blood-red tears rolling down the statue's metallic cheeks.

"It's a miracle," exclaims holiday a vigil before the 30-foot statue that began weeping 10 days ago. The statue, unheeded by U.S. troops who say they have more pressing duties to attend to, sits at the entrance of one of the former dictator's largest presidential palaces, a 15-square-mile complex in west Tikrit.

Mullah and others fight to gather the red tears that leak from the enormous eyes, tackling them periodically over the head and face, and dripping the blood between fingers. Some claim it heals wounds and eyesight, and others save it in bottles to take home. Many see it as a sign that the American occupation will soon end. Others say pointing skyward, Saddam is weeping for his people.

A U.S. military spokesman says the biggest problem is maintaining security and order among the curious and joyful onlookers. He adds the mystery of the "cry baby" Saddam statue remains unexplained but says investigators are due to disassemble the bawling behemoth and expect to find a scientific explanation.

"I think the statue was rigged to cry for religious just like this. I don't believe in miracles," he says. "But the ones that come out of the barrel of an M4." Meanwhile, "I'm happy to see Saddam sobbing. It'll have to do until we find the real one."

Saddam look-alikes can't find jobs!

By PETER DAVIS

IT'S DOUBLE trouble these days when you're an unemployed look-alike for deposed dictator Saddam Hussein.

A dozen Saddam doubles, unemployed since the American victory, complain that they can't find new employment and are constantly harassed due to their startling resemblance to their evil boss.

"I even shaved my mustache," says 60-year-old Ahmad Hamad — or "Saddam No. 11" — "but it hasn't helped. I was trained as a draftsman, but for the last 20 years standing in for Saddam is the only job I've ever had. I was especially good at meeting dignitaries from small, Third World countries. Perhaps you've seen the clip of me greeting the ambassador of Chad?"

Hamad and other doubles, including Mahmoud Salim "Saddam No. 4" say they've faced discrimination due to their physical appearance and have been rejected from jobs ranging from trash hauler to translator.

"Job interviews are especially frustrating, and it's hard to make a transition when your resume lists your last 25 years of employment as 'Dictator Double'" says Hamad.

"I've actually had three interviews — to be a waiter, male stripper and video store clerk," he says. "I'm in good shape, but I can't shake the image. I've been Saddam so long it's hard for people to get past my physical appearance, voice and gestures. They all told me it would be too unsettling for clients to be served by a man they've feared for so long. I considered plastic surgery, but I can't afford it."

"American GI's are constantly following me around and children jeer and throw stones," says Salim, who has tried to alter his looks by dying his hair red and growing a full beard. "The only offer I've had is to pose as Saddam's corpse for possible propaganda purposes, but there's no future in playing dead."

How America Changed The World

For the past two years, President George W. Bush has vigorously pursued the War On Terror. Today, millions of people who knew only dictatorships and torture are now living in safety and freedom because America took a stand and vowed to end terrorism and changed the world forever.

Ed Anger: Now that they've outlawed indoor smoking . . .

My America

BY ED ANGER

HERE'S WHAT PANSY LIBERALS WILL BAN NEXT!

I'M MADDER than the Marlboro Man at a no-smoking dude ranch at this stupid new law in Florida banning folks from lighting up in public.

This all-out war on tobacco makes me plain sick — it's like these left-wing, Stalinist killjoys are hell-bent on stamping out any behavior that's fun.

I'm not a cigarette smoker myself — unlike most folks. I had the willpower to kick the habit years ago. But I'm crazy about cramping on a good, single-malt sports commentator like when America was a war. And in the Anger family, we've been chewing tobacco for generations.

My great-great-grandfather died of a spittoon from 20 feet away. [illegible] out to be proud.

Tobacco is as American as apple pie, my friends.

Mark my words, banning smoking is just the beginning. These well-thanker liberals have a whole list of other normal activities they plan to outlaw.

Here are eight things you can bet your — pardon me, I'll make the [illegible]

1. Eating red meat — Not only does it supposedly clog your arteries, raising health costs for everyone, but animal-lovers will complain that it grosses them out at restaurants to see you chowing down on a helpless dead critter.

2. Dating gals with big head lights — There's a reason why she makes will get the [illegible] sure — and the [illegible] politically incorrect. Besides, [illegible]

3. Mowing the lawn — The [illegible] going to crowd will [illegible] the right of grass to grow [illegible] Especially [illegible] those new mowers.

4. Hunting and fishing — Next-to-gamble gun-hating partners and animal rights nuts are aching to pass a law to protect nonhuman persons.

5. Offensive dancing — And this won't mean that disgusting, lewd jiggling that's shown on TV. Couples [illegible] dancing will be banned as spastics who can't land the girl in the back seat don't wind up with low self-esteem.

6. Dart throwing — The [illegible] declares the [illegible] bed remains [illegible] up.

MONKEYSHINES: A social worker plays with little Robert, an ape who was passed off as a human baby. Robert – shaved regularly and hair-thinned in human care, growing 6 inches since he first appeared in Weekly World News.

SHAVED

This precious bundle of joy needs a loving home

WILL YOU adopt a cute little shaved ape baby?

Animal-rights activists are asking that question as they try to find a loving home for Robert, the last of more than one-shaved chimps who were painted off as human infants in a global adoption scam that to date has sent 30 men and women on two-month treks to jail.

"We need a perfect pet shop," says Helene Marsden, who has organized the counterfeiting with loving families since the FBI and Interpol shut down the adoption ring in June 2002.

"Once word of Robert leaked as an orphan, we got plenty of calls. But he's been treated like a human since he was born, and he's close as well — he's known 6 months in the last year will be his true home."

We want that treatment to continue. We would have enjoyed a good home to which up by caring parents who will treat him like one of the family and expose him to siblings who has an aptitude to it."

In addition to being a humane thing to do, Robert is a noble experiment to help the public realize the most of humans and his simple life. Chimps are much more human than people like to think.

As far as I'm concerned, the sky is the limit for Robert and all the other animals who started out their lives masquerading as humans and now share the comfort to become human.

I bet goose bumps just thinking about it.

As Weekly World News and other major media reported over a year ago, more than 200 heartless

APE BABY UP FOR ADOPTION

$60,000 a pop for shaved chimps that the bogus adoption ring passed off as human infants

At the time, Interpol Chief Inspector Jean-Paul Dupreuvinoir explained that the animals were being used to plug what is called in the baby trade the "adoption availability gap" — meaning there are more childless couples than there are babies for them to adopt.

He went on to call the scam "a human tragedy of epic proportions" — and warned that even though the adoption agency was based in Paris, it was known to have peddled chimps through satellite offices in Britain, Canada and the U.S. To date, 38 men and women have been convicted of fraud and related charges. Thirty are still in jail.

After seizing the firm's computers in their June 2002 sting, authorities were able to trace dozens of devastated couples who had watched in shock and disbelief as their cuddly newborns grew into hairy, shrieking chimpanzees who were more at home swinging from ceiling fans and tearing the doors off refrigerators than gurgling and gaa-gaaing at a book of nursery rhymes.

ADOPTION agent Helene Meyers

Those families were all prepared to cope with their animal "children". So Meyers and other concerned activists stepped in to help place the chimps with couples who knew the truth from the get go.

"Robert is about 11 months old and he's the last chimp we have left to adopt," Meyers says.

"He may not have the cutest face, and he may not be the smartest, but he has a special place in my heart because he's the one chimp who nobody seemed to want.

"He's so loving and gentle that you just want to take him in your arms and never let him go. He reminds me of a mentally challenged child who isn't 'smart enough' to distrust people or hate anyone.

"All you see is his beaming face and adoring black eyes and all you feel is his unconditional love. It's true that he's strong enough to hurt someone, but so are human kids.

"I'm sure the benefits will outweigh the risks if he's treated with respect and guided by a firm but loving hand.

"Please give this baby a home. He'll grow up to be the kind of son who will make you proud."

If you'd like to inquire about adopting Robert the baby chimp, write to WWN Adopt A Chimp, PO Box 3036, Boca Raton, FL 33431-0936. We'll forward it to the appropriate agency.

Weekly World News first broke the shaved ape scandal in our June 18, 2002, issue.

PROS AND CONS OF ADOPTING ROBERT THE SHAVED APE BABY

HERE, from activist Helene Meyers, are the pros and cons of adopting Robert, based on a comparison of his behavior to date and chimp behavior in general:

Pro: Robert is loving and cuddly.

Con: Chimps are strong enough to tear a man's arm off or break a child's neck in a fit of rage — or just for the fun of it while having wrestled.

Pro: Robert prides himself on his cleanliness and is housebroken.

Con: Chimps are extremely intelligent and capable of almost any human endeavor. Some have murdered in cold blood using fire pokers, tire irons and even guns that were left lying around.

Pro: Robert is almost completely potty trained and can feed himself with a spoon.

Con: Chimps are widely known to throw both their feces and food.

Pro: Robert is relatively docile and, if guided by a firm hand, will likely behave as well as any human child.

Con: Chimps often use their intelligence and cunning to thwart their human masters. Some have murdered in cold blood using fire pok

THE RAP SHEET!

MYSTICAL ARMY'S SEX CHIEF. Grammy-nominated rapper Mystikal and his two bodyguards pounced on an exotic dancer and forced her to perform "degrading" sexual acts, according to the prosecutor on the bizarre case.

The 32-year-old rapper pleaded guilty to extortion and sexual battery and Baton Rouge, La., prosecutor Sue Bonnie Ma bodyguards, Leland "Bubba" Ellis and Percy "P" Carter, pleaded guilty to sexual battery.

A plea deal is expected to be finalized September 29, which gives Mystikal a 10-year suspended jail term with five years' supervised probation.

Bonnie says Mystikal ordered the topless dancer to perform sexual acts on him and the bodyguards, the cops.

Bonnie adds that the 40-year-old victim strongly denies the claim from the rapper that "She danced nothing from him, but he still overpowered her."

Lawyers in that charged Mystikal with aggravated rape, which could keep the rapper behind bars for life. Bonnie says the deal for the lesser charge was reached with the victim's support.

Mystikal's attorney told reporters that the rapper doesn't agree with all the allegations, but does admit that sexual battery took place.

"I'm glad that it's getting behind me," says Mystikal, whose Prophylaxis was nominated for Best Rap Album at this year's Grammy Awards.

MYSTICAL could have gone to jail for life, prosecutor says.

strived to maintain a low profile on Earth until now, has suddenly stepped into the [redacted], is sending shockwaves [redacted] Washington — where his role behind the scenes in U.S. politics has been [redacted] kept secret in government circles for more than a decade.

But the publicity shy E.T. who reportedly ended his relationship with Hillary two months ago, has a good reason for letting the cat out of the bag.

"Hillary has been bad mouthing him all over town," says an editor at the publishing house closest to sealing a deal on the book. "She's chewed the ears off of every Washington insider who'll listen, telling them how P'Lod used her, then dumped her.

"It's got [redacted] officials are beginning to doubt that he's such a benevolent alien after all. It's threatening his mission here.

"P'Lod wants to set the record straight, tell his side of the story — even if it means finally exposing the extraterrestrial [redacted]."

It was in our issue that hit newsstands the week of Sept. 11, 2001, that Weekly World News first broke the story of the sensational romance — mind-blowing news that was largely overshadowed [redacted] the 9-11 tragedy.

Readers were stunned to learn the prim and proper senator from New York was caught with her extraterrestrial beau at a [redacted] Manhattan hotel by her outraged hubby, ex-President Bill Clinton.

Reporters and took damning photos of them. Later leaked to WWN by person or persons unknown.

Hillary first met the [redacted]-ruin at [redacted] spring of 2000.

"Our eyes met across the room," P'Lod writes in his book. "We experienced an instant, mutual attraction."

The editor, who requested anonymity, notes: "Hillary might not be a classic beauty, but P'Lod thought her attributes — Her [redacted] IQ — for a human — and impressive forehead also appealed to him."

Hillary is said to have likewise found the spaceman's soaring intelligence and lofty morals a turn-on. What's more, she told pals that he displayed lovemaking techniques "thousands of years in advance of any human male."

On several occasions, the rocket flames whisked Hillary into orbit aboard his ship, where the pair enjoyed high-flying whoopee in the cockpit, dining hall and even on the floor-of-the-cargo deck, the book reveals.

"Hillary introduced me to human-style lovemaking, which I found satisfying in a primitive way," P'Lod writes. "In turn, I showed her the way my species shows affection. She was a very fast learner."

The relationship soured in June when Hillary learned that the "altruistic" alien was triple-timing her both with a young oil-industry lobbyist and a well-known, alien, blonde GOP strategist.

[redacted] behavior.

"Hillary said she understood this intellectually. But her heart was another matter."

The editor justifies the [redacted] cash advance offered to the alien — more than twice the sum shelled out to Hillary for her bio.

"This is the first book ever written by a real extraterrestrial — that alone is worth every penny," she says. "Beyond that, it's a riveting love story."

The alien's crapulate with Hillary aren't the only thing in the book.

The 300-page potboiler also reveals why the aliens are here, the true origin of the universe, the E.T.'s ultimate plan for Bush and other stuff sure to please the egghead crowd.

But it's the out-of-this-world sex that will rock readers back on their heels.

"The descriptions of Hillary's 'close encounters' with P'Lod are incredibly hot," says the editor. "I needed a cold shower after reading Chapter Three."

[redacted] Clinton has thus far declined to [redacted] which, if the latest offer is accepted, will arrive on shelves by the end of September.

But friends says Hillary feels "betrayed" that P'Lod is exposing her most intimate secrets to the world — and has privately called the book "trash."

Unfortunately, P'Lod's side of the story may never see the light of day.

"The Bush administration may kill this book on national-security grounds," says a Capitol [redacted] source. "Even though P'Lod may think this is a fine time for the aliens

CRASHED & BURNED Spurned lover Clive Duncan has been charged with aggravated stalking.

THE 'PLANE TRUTH Woman claims boyfriend used airborne spy-cams to watch her every move

VICTIM Prudence Harris told police she would advise all women to avoid men who are proficient in high technology.

THE ACT of stalking an ex-lover has been taken to a new "high," according to a Swansea, Wales, woman who claims her former boyfriend watched her every move — with the help of an unmanned spy plane!

Prudence Harris, a 25-year-old waitress, says that she was unaware of former beau Clive Duncan's high-tech surveillance of her until one of his homemade drones accidentally crashed through a clothing store window where she was shopping.

"I heard the glass shatter at the front of the store, and I thought it was an explosion," says Harris. "As we were being evacuated, I saw the aircraft hanging in the window, and I knew immediately that it was one of Clive's."

"It didn't take long to figure out what he was up to."

Informed by Harris, investigators at the scene eventually searched Duncan's home workshop, where he designs and manufactures remote-controlled spy craft for the British government.

"It turns out that Mr. Duncan has been watching Ms. Harris for a year," [illegible] Detective Sergeant Dai Thomas. "I find it very hard to believe that she had no idea she was being spied on."

The investigation also revealed that Duncan's aircraft had been fitted with [illegible] video cameras, enabling Harris' movements and whereabouts [illegible].

"We found a large collection of videotapes dating back to 2001," says Detective Thomas. "Mr. Harris walking [illegible] at her favorite video store, Harris' hometown and whereabouts [illegible]."

Swansea native Duncan, 30, was arrested and charged with one count of aggravated stalking.

When asked what advice she might give to women who wish to avoid obsessive men who may be prone to stalking, Harris was quick with her reply.

"Avoid men who are proficient in high technology," says the young victim. "They may look like a good catch, but if you ever want to get rid of one, there will be hell to pay."

AMERICA'S SEXIEST SEERS

Let Serena and Sonya help you! Write Sabat's Weekly World News, PO Box 3004, West Palm Beach, Fla. 33402-9126. We turned your future problems, don't send money. Their advice is free.

I'm haunted by a sexy ghost — can I marry her?

DEAR SERENA: I know this sounds crazy, but I've fallen in love with a ghost. She first appeared in my bedroom mirror about two weeks ago and has visited me every day since. She's absolutely gorgeous and fascinating to talk to. Please tell me how we can make this work. — Stallion in Kalamazoo

Dear Stallion: Sex and the spirit world is unpredictable in this relationship. Your girlfriend is a spirit in reputation only, you're flesh and blood, so marriage is out. The best you can hope for is a brief, fiery friendship that will still be a little haunting. I have several spirit friends who visit me often. In fact, they're the ones who keep me posted on what's happening on the Other Side.

Dear Sonya: I love my job. My boss is cool but I have a problem with the girl in the next cubicle. She and I fight constantly, usually over silly stuff. I don't want to leave my job but this situation is getting unbearable. What can I do? — Can't Get Along in New York

Dear Can't: Don't worry. I did a deep crystal meditation and learned that the clash in the next cubicle [illegible]

PERSONAL TO:

Pete Supermodel in San Antonio: The Love cards say your beauty will carry you far, but you'll still need a good education because looks don't last forever.

Roberta in Oklahoma City: Stay strong, Babe. The stress Home Shows show a dramatic change in your luck starting on the 13th. Play the lottery and enter every contest you can – great things are coming your way.

Scared Stiff in Wisconsin: Vampires exist, hon, but your neighbor isn't one of them. He's just a guy with really bad dreamwork. I send an Egyptian sleep spell to help him get some shut-eye.

Fearing Infection in L.A.: According to my crystal ball, you're not going to catch SARS, monkey pox, anthrax or West Nile virus. You will, however, get a bad summer cold, so stock up on tissues and orange juice.

Dear Serena: I have an overwhelming desire to go into outer space. I know it's an impossibility, but I think about it all the time because I just don't feel comfortable here on Earth. Was I an alien in a previous life? – Out of Place in Dublin

Dear Out of Place: [illegible]

Dear Sonya: I'm a 13-year-old girl with a weight problem and I was hoping you could help me. No matter how much I diet, I still feel fat. Do you have a spell that will help me become permanently thin? — Feeling Oliver in Charlotte

Dear Feeling Oliver: [illegible]

Dear Serena: My grandmother died recently and completely screwed me in her will! My two sisters received money, furniture and other cool stuff, and all I got was a lousy lockset. HEATHENS FLOCK TO TREE THAT BEARS SATAN'S FACE

Devil worshipers receiving cash and miracles!

WITCHES, warlocks and Satan worshipers are flocking to a giant oak that bears the Devil's evil image and is doling out miracles like there's no tomorrow.

Since the face, evil and leering, appeared on the 85 foot tree's trunk after a lightning strike on July 3, an estimated 300 pagans, heathens and agnostics claim to have received everything from six figure cash windfalls to cures for afflictions ranging from acne, obesity and arthritis to terminal cancer just by kneeling before the image or touching it.

And they're backing up by a warned clergyman who confirms the Devil Tree is offering up miracles of a magnitude not seen since Jesus walked on water and Moses parted the Red Sea.

"But these acts of kindness come with a price — your immortal soul," warns David Burnham, a Methodist minister who tried — and failed — to kill the tree by dumping over 200 pounds of salt on its roots and surrounding the ground around it with kerosene.

"The Devil is not your friend, he is your enemy and he will take you to Hell for ever and ever and ever.

"I believe it was the Devil who made the tree's face in the first place and now he's using it to lure people away from God.

"Instead of spending eternity with God in Heaven, they're going to suffer in

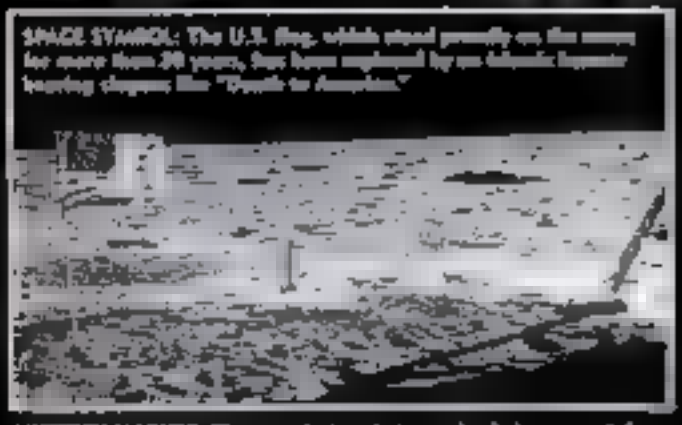
U.S. FLAG STOLEN FROM MOON

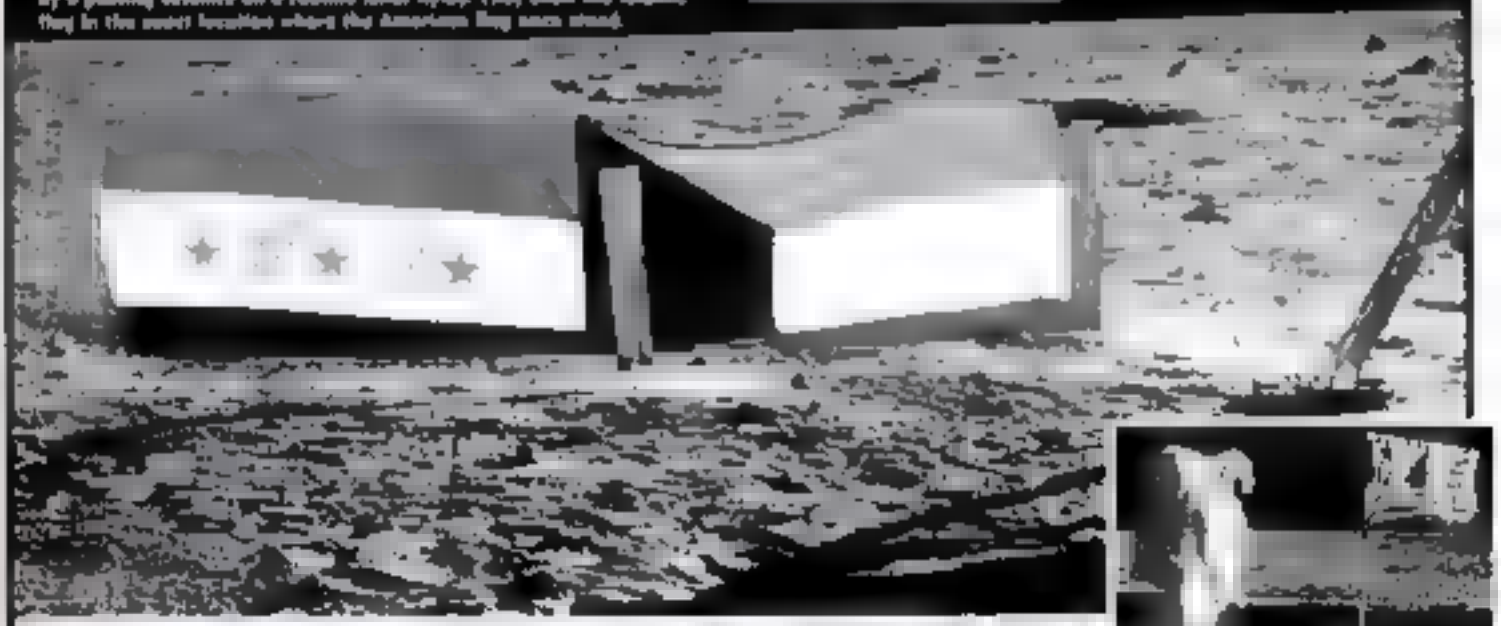
. . . & replaced with an Islamic banner, says astronomer

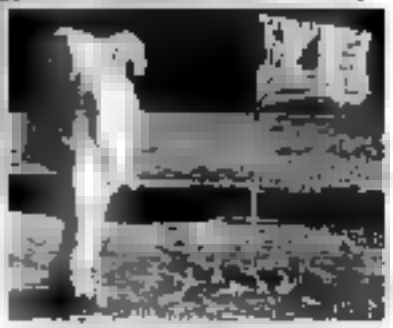
By MIKE MOSES, Correspondent



SPACE SYMBOL: The U.S. flag, which stood proudly on the moon for more than 30 years, has been replaced by an Islamic banner bearing slogans like "Death to America."

MYSTERY MARKER: These exclusive photographs, taken by a passing satellite on a routine lunar flyby, show the Islamic flag in the exact location where the American flag once stood.





SUMMER OF '69: Astronaut Edwin "Buzz" Aldrin helped plant the American flag on the moon.

THE U.S. flag is missing from the moon.

Shocking new pictures of the planet's surface reveal that the flag placed there by Neil Armstrong in 1969 has been removed and a mysterious banner adorned with Arabic symbols stands in its place.

"It is extremely unlikely that the new flag was put there by the Russians or the Chinese," says one worried Pentagon source. "The only countries besides the U.S. even remotely capable of landing on the moon are markers there for Iranian and Syrian missiles with nuclear warheads of North Korea.

I believe the flag is a warning that a Middle Eastern nation has space capability," says retired astronomer Dr. Abram Vinjad. "There are markers there for Tehran and Syrian Hawk air defense missiles pointed at our property, planted by a Chinese-made Iranian or another radical Islamic enemy under the thumb of the mad mullahs."

According to insiders, the U.S. government is planning a top-secret manned space flight to replace the missing American flag [illegible] Iran and Syria, possibly with the cooperation of North Korea.

TAX DOLLAR$ FOR DONUTS!

Bush's new plan is a sweet deal for fatties!

TASTY TAX BREAK: The president's plan will bolster our sagging economy, officials say.

According to White House observers, President Bush will give "America's largest minority" a hefty tax break based on the amount of donuts and other fast-food pastries they devour.

Dubbed the "Dollars for Donuts Initiative" the plan will help pump-start the nation's lagging economy, says one highly placed government official. "The more you eat the more you save," the source reveals.

"Twinkies, Ho-Ho's Devil Dogs, glazed donuts, chocolate donuts covered with sprinkles — everything except French pastries is fair game as long as you save the receipts and send them in with your 1040 form."

The Internal Revenue Service is already preparing prototypes of the revised 1040 form to include weight and height entries. Officials say the skinny tax breaks" instantly apply for the lucrative benefits.

"Those guys with the receipts to prove it," says one IRS official who requests that he not be identified, "a 5-foot-8-inch, 275-pound donut stuffer could realize a refund of up to $1,500 depending on the number of donuts shoved into their mouth in 1993."

"The DDI is a plan for tax breaks. Income guidelines don't matter, just your weight and the amount of money you pumped into America's domestic pastry industry during the last fiscal year."

P. MILTON Crenshaw calls 1993 the year of the donut.

White House experts have

The more you eat the bigger your refund!

PUT YOUR MONEY WHERE YOUR MOUTH IS: People who love pastries will reap big benefits as they pack on the pounds.

The new trend started in Germany, spread to France and has now taken hold of Soho, a gourmet Big Apple eatery. People spend about $100 to get into the pitch black hush and banners include wine

FIND OF THE

PROPHECIES OF

ASTOUNDING prophecies drafted by Jesus Christ when He was a young boy of only 9 and lost for more than 2,000 years have surfaced in the looted National Museum of Antiquities in Baghdad!

The fragile papyrus scrolls were discovered on April 14 — after locals ravaged the museum in the wake of Saddam's fall — in the base of an ancient Sumerian statue from the Biblical city of Nineveh.

I WEPT with joy, said Dr al-Qashlith.

"We were assessing damage to the museum and I was at the point of tears because so many priceless artifacts had been stolen or destroyed," says Dr Bader al-Qashlith, an Iraqi professor of archaeology affiliated with the facility.

"One of my assistants was examining the base of the missing statue and noticed that the damage to the stone had exposed a small secret compartment. We used chisels to break into the compartment and inside found the scrolls.

"After several hours of study, when I realized what I was holding in my hands, I began to tremble and then to openly weep.

"It was as if some higher power had made up for the painful loss of all those ancient artifacts by allowing us to find the first known writings of Jesus Christ."

Although translation of the scrolls is still in the very preliminary stage, Dr al-Qashlith says they were apparently composed during the so-called "lost" early years of Christ, after the Holy Family fled to Egypt.

"The writer clearly identifies himself as Jesus, son of Mary and Joseph, Hebrews from Bethlehem," the expert reveals. "Although He describes Himself as a boy of 9 years of age, His language and ideas suggests a mind far more mature and sophisticated. He appears to be fully aware that He has abilities beyond those of a normal person."

The scrolls are written in a form of Egyptian called "demotic," a cursive script used by ordinary merchants, rather than more formal hieroglyphics.

"Demotic is difficult to translate, but what we've deciphered already is absolutely stunning," says Dr al-Qashlith. "The young Jesus somehow was able to predict not only events in His own lifetime, but others many centuries down the line — including what could be interpreted as the American liberation of Iraq.

"And what He says about things yet to come is even more startling."

Here, from the expert, are the Jesus-prophecies that have been translated so far:

I. Although My earthly father wants Me to follow in his footsteps, I shall never be the able carpenter he is. Yes, but I have another Father, a greater Builder still, and I shall do His work on this Earth.

II. I shall be betrayed by one of My own followers and shall suffer bloody death upon a piece of wood. Yet I shall walk again.

III. A son of Rome shall sail across the sea and find there a New World. And I say unto you, the people of this new land will become the hope of all mankind.

IV. The Beast shall first seize power in Babylon and this cruel tyrant will mightily oppress his people. Men from the New World will liberate the land. Many will say this son of Satan has perished. But in 10 years' time he will appear again and in accordance with the Scriptures, he shall unleash terrible evil as master of the world. "Babylon was located where Iraq is today," Dr al-Qashlith notes.

V. Just as men from the New World bring freedom and peace to the people of Babylon, so too will they liberate Persia. "Persia is the old name for modern-day Iran," Dr al-Qashlith points out.

VI. A great pestilence will arise in the East and bring death to one third of mankind. No physician or balm can cure this disease. Only those who pray in My name, saying three "Jesus spare me," shall be saved.

VII. The son of Adam will travel to the Moon and to planets. Even the planet Venus he will find his brother race.

POWERFUL PREDICTIONS: Among the events foretold by Jesus: His betrayal by one of His own followers; the discovery of America by Christopher Columbus; and man walking on the moon.

VIII. As Atlantis sank, so shall sink the land of the crocodile and the large hopping animal that carries about its young in a pouch.

IX. Men of science will create all manner of strange and wonderful beasts, from flying cats to spotted zebras. They shall also create a new breed of supermen who shall rule for a time over the rest of mankind. These shall be giants in stature and giants of the mind, yet their hearts will be cold as ice and black as coal.

X. As the end of time draws near, all men shall hear the thoughts of others, as well as the thoughts of beasts of burden, both the dog and the donkey.

XI. A final war shall take place between good and evil. The battle will not be fought over Jerusalem, as many fear, but a city called Peking.

In the darkest hour, I shall return. Some will not recognise Me for I shall come as a woman. But I am both male and female, the Beginning and the End.

Marilla wasn't impressed. "That (jerk) almost killed me!" the director fumed.
